SCHOLARLY EVENTS

Executive Sessions

This year's theme "Anthropology Matters!," is a call across the field to unite in our diversity, to embrace difficulty, be vibrant messmates, and promote the relevance of what anthropology is and does. Anthropology is best at describing the past, exploring the present, predicting the future, and navigating the processes of being and becoming human.

Invited Sessions

Sessions designated invited are open to all meeting registrants. Each AAA Section is responsible for the organization of one or more innovative, synthesizing sessions intended to reflect the state-of-the-art and the thematic concerns in the major subfields.

Gallery Sessions

Gallery Sessions, formerly Poster Sessions, are visual presentations of work and/or research. Presenters post materials such as maps, photographs, graphs, charts and/or tables on a display board along with textual summaries of their work. Gallery sessions provide a more intimate forum for exchange than do regular paper presentations by facilitating informal discussions between presenters and their audience.

Installations

Installations offer attendees an opportunity to learn from a range of vested interests that are not typically encountered or easily found on the traditional AAA program. Installations are meant to disrupt who and what we tend to see at the Annual Meetings, helping encounter presenters and attendees alike to do different kinds of things at the intersections of anthropological arts, sciences, and cultural expression.

Workshops

Workshops focus on engagement, interactivity, and in-depth analysis of pertinent methodologies and subjects within the field of anthropology. These sessions provide opportunities for attendees to update their knowledge and skills in a variety of professional areas. For ease of use, we have grouped workshops into different tracks: Academic Training and Career Development, Practicing and Applied Career Development, Technical Skill Development, and Humanistic Anthropology. Please see the full session listings in the body of the program for more details on this year's selection. Unless explicitly noted, all workshops require registration beforehand to the Annual Meeting and the specific workshop; a monitor will check attendees into the workshop.

Film Sessions

Film sessions engage anthropology through a new lens. They are part of the AAA's Media Festival and include interactive media work as well as short works. For more information see the Society for Visual Anthropology's website at www.societyforvisualanthropology.org.

Retrospective Sessions

Retrospective Sessions are intended to highlight career contributions of established leading scholars (for example, on the occasion of their retirement or significant anniversary).

Roundtables

Roundtables are panel discussions with audience participation that do not include papers or timed 15 minute presentations.

SPECIAL EVENTS

Business Meeting

Business Meetings are a time for sections or the association as a whole to come together and discuss pressing issues that pertain to the field.

Board Meeting

Board Meetings are time for sectional and association board members to gather and discuss the year's developments and future agendas.

Committee Meeting

Committee Meetings are a time for AAA committee members to gather and discuss the year's developments and future agendas.

Reception

Receptions are social gatherings for attendees of the annual meeting. They act as reunions, networking events, or simply space to consider the day's scholarly material. Contact the sponsors of the receptions for more information.

Certificate of Attendance/Certificate of Presentation

Certificate of Attendance/Certificate of Presentation can be printed at the AAA Information booth. These must be printed onsite and cannot be requested after the meeting has been completed.

AAA PRINCIPLES OF PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

AAA is dedicated to the dissemination of anthropological knowledge and its use to solve human problems. Anthropologists work in the widest variety of contexts studying all aspects of the human experience, and face myriad ethical quandaries inflected in different ways by the contexts in which they work and the kinds of issues they address. Seven core principles are shared across subfields and contexts of practice.

These core principles are expressed as concise statements, accompanied by brief discussions placing that principle in a broader context, along with more detailed examinations of how each affects or may be helpful to anthropologists in different subfields or work contexts. The Statement of Principles also offers resources to assist anthropologists in tackling difficult ethical issues or the new situations that inevitably arise in the production of knowledge.

The American Anthropological Association does not adjudicate assertions of unethical behavior. These principles are intended to educate, foster discussion, and serve as a guide to responsible decision-making.

1. Do No Harm
2. Be Open and Honest Regarding Your Work
3. Obtain Informed Consent and Necessary Permissions
4. Weigh Competing Ethical Obligations Due Collaborators and Affected Parties
5. Make Your Results Accessible
6. Protect and Preserve Your Records
7. Maintain a Respectful and Ethical Professional Relationships

2-0005 Technological Methodologies in Language Documentation and Anthropology

SPONSOR: Society for Linguistic Anthropology

While methods in anthropology often focus on the ethnographic components of research, the technologies utilized in language documentation are increasingly important to anthropological research, and the ethnographic methodologies practiced by anthropologists have demonstrated the potential to contribute to language documentation within endangered language communities. This workshop will provide participants with hands-on training in language documentation technologies and methodologies that draw on best practices for in situ language research and resource creation as well as the linguistic, practical, and technical dimensions of ethical collaborations within research contexts. Granting agencies are increasingly requiring clearly articulated data management plans that describe collection methods, the data format, archiving plan, storage and security of data during the research period, and dissemination plan. These components are dependent on the following: (1) aspects of consent and intellectual property rights that apply across multiple anthropological fields, (2) an understanding of the methods and limitations of reformatting or conversion of digital audio and video files, (3) an understanding of digital file sizes, and (4) interpreting the requirements of archives in order to increase the data's ability to be forwardly migrated. The workshop contains four two-hour training sessions: (1) producing and working with high-quality audiovisual recordings, (2) annotation, management, and dissemination software (e.g. ELAN, Mirmaa, and Mukurtu), (3) metadata and archiving, (4) and consent, rights, and intellectual property.

2-0260 Anthropological Entrepreneurship: Contradiction or Reality?

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology

This workshop is part of the “Business Anthropology Matters!” initiative. Can anthropologists survive, even thrive, in independent business as contractors, consultants, or entrepreneurs? Of course they can, and there are many good role models from whom to learn. This workshop should be of benefit to anyone seeking to strike out on their own with anthropological entrepreneurship as the foundation.

The first section of this workshop will first review some basics of going it alone as an independent consultant or setting up a small contracting business to serve private and/or public sector markets. The workshop will then feature a second section with Q&A featuring a panel of anthropologists who are working on their own or who have set up their own small businesses. Some of the anticipated topics to be discussed in either the first or second sections of the workshop include: The business of the business (license, office set up); LLC vs independent (liability, taxes, deductions, banking); Finding and retaining clients, and basic marketing; Setting rates; Billing and accounting.

2-0265 Design Anthropology: Ethnographic Approaches to Innovation

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology

What is ‘design anthropology’ and why is it important to business professionals? What are the meaningful connections between the two disciplines, design and anthropology? Both designers and anthropologists use research as a way to listen to people. For the anthropologist, understanding tools and methods designers use helps them to re-frame projects and provide fresh insights and “ways in” to empathizing with and understanding their research subjects - and the designers they may find themselves working alongside in many organizations. This workshop introduces Human-Centered Design (HCD) and Design Anthropology as ways to experiment with processes and tools of people who practice these methodologies around the world. Practical activities will range from visualizations (i.e. mind-mapping, white boarding and framework creation) to data organization with post-its, reduction activities in group discussions and “World Cafés,” and various methods of prototyping. Focus will be on how to create nonlinear and iterative processes that allow for multiple rounds of listening, co-creation with various stakeholders and customers, and participatory design.

3-0210 That Almost Finished Journal Article

SPONSOR: Society for Medical Anthropology

Are you sitting on the third draft of a paper you haven’t gotten around to submitting? Stuck changing a conference presentation or dissertation chapter into a publishable article? Avoiding revising an article for resubmission because of daunting reviewers’ comments? Do you have questions about peer review and editorial processes?

Designed for junior professors, post-docs, and advanced graduate students (ABD), this all-day, hands-on workshop provides guidelines and feedback needed to finish revising and submit an article for peer review. To participate fully in the workshop, bring 2 double-spaced print copies of a draft manuscript you are planning to submit or resubmit to a journal. The first page should include your current abstract, total word count, name of the journal, and maximum words permitted by that journal. A laptop is also recommended.

The facilitator will lead you through analyzing components of your draft, checking that you have: hooked readers at the beginning, balanced the structure of the article, provided signposts and transitions to guide readers through your argument, linked data logically to analysis, written a solid conclusion and accurate abstract, and taken other steps to increase the likelihood that your paper will be accepted for publication. The facilitator demystifies the peer review process, discusses strategies for steady publication, and provides checklists for manuscript preparation.

3-0505 How to Write for the Public

SPONSOR: General Anthropological Division

SAPIENS is a new online magazine of the Wenner-Gren Foundation dedicated to making anthropological research, thinking, and discoveries accessible to a worldwide public readership. SAPIENS is making anthropology matter by connecting the discipline with a broad public, helping to shape conversations about immigration, the environment, evolution, health care, history, race, Trump, Brexit, Facebook, Fat Tuesday, and so much more. This workshop will provide an opportunity to learn tools and techniques, which will help you to write in a compelling, accessible, and relevant way for non-anthropologists. Hosted by the past and present presidents of the Wenner-Gren Foundation, Leslie Aiello and Danilyn Rutherford, the workshop will be led by Amanda Mascarelli, a science journalist with more than a decade of writing experience and whose work has appeared in The Washington Post, The New York Times, Los Angeles Times, Nature, Science, New Scientist, Audubon, and many other publications. In her current role as managing editor for SAPIENS, Mascarelli will provide you a framework to approach popular writing and walk you through the publication process for SAPIENS and similar outlets. All are welcome—whether you've published a dozen articles or none at all. Writing is a craft that must be cultivated, so please come join us to sharpen your skills and learn about how you can engage a broad public audience to make your research matter.

3-0510 Innovating Qualitative Research Through Filmed Ethnography

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology

This workshop is part of the Business Anthropology Matters! Initiative. Come participate in a workshop where an ethnographer/filmmaker will share his field experience (and occasional frustration!) of trying to implement an ethnographic approach using film in design and marketing research. Don't be afraid of another PowerPoint presentation here. This workshop is a mix of free-style passionate storytelling about professional experiences using as many clips of films as possible, while engaging attendees in discussions about the finer points of ensuring technical quality, business culture acumen, and client negotiation. The workshop illustrates a particular approach to ethnographic filmmaking including securing the contract, working as a member of a team, establishing rapport and conducting initial observations, filming through all phases of the research, applying a method to edit field sequences, and delivering thematic edits or a presentational video to the client.

3-0500 Publishing a Peer-Reviewed Article: Thoughts from a Journal Editor

SPONSOR: American Ethnological Society

This workshop is focused on helping attendees who seek to publish their manuscripts in peer-reviewed academic journals, particularly anthropology journals. The workshop will be coordinated by the editor-in-chief of American Ethnologist, who during his tenure has reviewed hundreds of manuscripts on a wide range of topics. Attendees will have the opportunity to ask questions from an experienced journal editor, and in so doing potentially improve the chance that they will succeed in getting their own manuscripts published. Topics to be covered include: choosing an appropriate journal for your manuscript; understanding the importance of submission guidelines; demystifying the process of peer review; tips for responding to reviewers' comments and revising your manuscript; what to do if your manuscript is rejected outright; and tips for promoting your work once it is in print.

Podcasting 101 with AnthroPod

SPONSOR: Society for Cultural Anthropology

The producers of AnthroPod, the official podcast of the Society for Cultural Anthropology, invite participants to join us for a crash course on how to create anthropology podcasts. Podcasts present the opportunity to expand conversations in anthropology beyond the pages of journals and monographs. Moreover, as diverse podcasts such as Radiolab, Serial, Freakonomics, and more grow in popularity, the medium offers a way for anthropologists to reach more general audiences. Podcasts also uniquely afford possibilities for presenting sound and music ethnography as well as multivocal and collaborative research. Participants in this workshop will learn from the AnthroPod team's expertise and, upon completion of the workshop, will be given the opportunity to guest produce an episode for AnthroPod.

In this workshop, we will cover the basic technical skills needed to produce an engaging podcast and explore different approaches to bringing anthropology into a podcast format. Producers from the AnthroPod team will introduce tips on how to record a podcast using technology you probably already have, how to adapt your field interviewing skills to a podcast interview, and how to edit your podcast into a polished final product. Participants will get hands-on experience with the skills needed to produce a podcast. We will also discuss different formats and options for translating discussions in anthropology into podcast content. This hands-on workshop will enable you to expand your anthropology toolkit with skills in an exciting new medium.

Anthropology Of/Through Games

SPONSOR: Society for Visual Anthropology

From Bateson's and Mead's "Democracies and Dictators" to Tsing's and Pollman's "Global Futures", anthropologists have taken an interest in designing games to teach and communicate anthropological ideas. In this workshop, we will discuss tabletop, card, roleplaying, and computer games to explore themes in social, behavioral, and cultural theory such as play, cooperation, evolution and change, symbols, and power. The experiential and empathetic qualities of games can be a powerful medium for learning. In this workshop, we will engage gaming from a variety of perspectives, culminating in game design and play-testing. Anastasia Salter, Assistant Professor of Digital Media at the University of Central Florida, will introduce game design as a platform for the critique of power and the articulation of marginalized voices. Panelists will discuss and analyze how the narratives and mechanics of games convey meaning and engage players in a worldview. Since many popular games are based on colonial and Eurocentric premises, we will invite participants to reimagine, "hack", and decolonize games. The workshop includes a creative, hands-on design lab (maker space), facilitated by an experienced game designer Anastasia Salter, where we will learn about the basic elements of game design. Workshop participants will develop games based on anthropological theory and method. We will prototype and play-test the games produced in the workshop, as well as other anthro-inspired games at #AnthroCon2017 on Saturday, December 2 from 3:00 – 5:00 p.m. during the on-site #AnthropologyCon Gaming Salon. 3-0975 Crafting Visual Arguments

SPONSOR: Society for Visual Anthropology

This interactive workshop will take you from conceptualizing and creating images in the field, to editing choices and post-production software, and end with considerations on publication and display. On the journey we will discuss technical matters as well as explore the ethical, theoretical, and methodological issues key to visual argumentation and communication.

We start with a discussion on what makes a good image (both technically and aesthetically) and how to create one. From there we will advance to a discussion of the opportunities and constraints intrinsic to image-based research and representation. We will work around the question “what constitutes good visual argumentation?” developing specific guidelines for critiquing and constructing academic visual arguments and representations.

Building on this framework, and foregrounding the comparative strengths and weaknesses of visual versus textual media, participants will then be given the opportunity to work on constructing their own “visual arguments.” Further development will then be facilitated via a group debriefing among workshop participants. Participants should bring a laptop computer or tablet. Sets of images will be provided, but feel free to bring your own series of 20-40 images related to your research interests.

4-0525 Charting Your Course: Developing a Personal Strategic Plan

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology

This workshop is part of the Business Anthropology Matters! Initiative; however, it is open and relevant to all attendees of the AAA meeting, both applied and academically oriented. As higher education administration continues to be heavily influenced by business practices, and employment opportunities for anthropologists are more often found in the private sector, it is essential that individual anthropologists start thinking more strategically about their career paths and how they intersect with their own personal and professional goals. Graduate programs often expose students to only one, narrowly defined path that nearly always leads to a tenured faculty position at a research university, yet few will actually reach this goal and many more may not want to. This workshop is designed to help you identify your short and long-term goals and create a step-by-step plan on how to achieve those goals. Participants will also be encouraged to explore a wide range of career possibilities and to incorporate their concerns for work-life balance and job satisfaction. This workshop is relevant to anthropologists from all subfields and career stages, from students to mid-career professionals.

We will discuss what both funding agencies are looking for, what makes a proposal successful, and what the most common pitfalls are. We will dispel the myths that surround the funding process, focus on how proposals are processed and evaluated in both agencies, and explain how your proposal can get the attention it deserves.

4-0520 Using Ethnographic Methods to Inform Development of Measurement Tools

SPONSOR: Society for Medical Anthropology & Society for Psychological Anthropology

Increasingly, anthropologists are engaging with mixed-methods research. The development of culturally-appropriate measurement tools is an important yet challenging part of this process, particularly for anthropologists interested in cognitive or medical anthropology. Using instruments that best reflect local ethnobiologies and ethnopsychologies, explanatory models, and experiences of health and illness are essential for ensuring validity. Anthropologists are ideally suited to identify such relevant categories and constructs but are not always trained in translating ethnographic findings into quantitative measures. This workshop will introduce participants to the concepts and methods that are central to developing appropriate, ethnographically valid measurement tools.

This workshop is an interactive participatory teaching session consisting of small group activities facilitated by researchers with instrument development experience in multiple settings. There will be an emphasis on measurement tools that are used in the context of health research and interventions. The workshop will begin with a discussion of the limitations of using standard instruments for cross-cultural health and mental health assessment. Participants will be exposed to the novel tool development process, and facilitators will guide participants through a simulated tool development exercise. Participants will be exposed to pile sort and free-listing procedures and basic thematic analysis procedures to demonstrate how qualitative and ethnographic data can be used to develop items for instruments. The group will then discuss instrument piloting and refinement, including quantitative and qualitative techniques. Workshop participants will develop foundational skills and will be provided with resources for future reference as they seek to apply these strategies in their own work.

SPONSOR: American Ethnological Society

This workshop is focused on helping attendees who are interested in the possibility of submitting book manuscripts to peer-reviewed academic publishers. Workshop participants will include acquisitions editors from three university presses who have overseen the review of hundreds of manuscripts covering a wide range of topics. Attendees will have the opportunity to ask questions from these experienced editors, and in so doing potentially improve the chances that they will succeed in getting their own book manuscripts published. Some of the topics that will be covered include: choosing the right publisher for your work; preparing a book proposal or prospectus; submitting your book manuscript; how the peer review process works; revising your manuscript; working with publishers to promote your book; and tips for avoiding common mistakes.

4-0725 Image and Identity: Using Photography in Psychological Anthropology

SPONSOR: Society for Psychological Anthropology

Mead and Bateson worked with photography and film at the outset of what became psychological anthropology. Despite this early use of image-based research and representation, visual methodologies seem largely absent from most work in the field today. Although there are some notable exceptions (e.g. Lemelson's film series on culture and mental illness in Indonesia), image-base work is absent from most current iterations of psychological anthropology. As the initial call for and exhibition of photo-essays at 2017 SPA Biennial meeting in New Orleans illustrated, however, images can convey understandings inaccessible to purely verbal and textual explications. As such, this workshop is designed to provide participants with a framework for thinking about and understanding how images convey information, how this differs from verbal content, and how to use both in a complementary manner. While the general model presented is applicable to all visual work, this workshop focuses on photography as still images (whether in the form of pictures, graphs, diagrams, and the like) are already regular features of academic publishing and scholarship, including books, journal articles, online content, and conference presentations. Whether you are new to photography, psychological anthropology, or both, this workshop explores the relationships between images and culturally contextualized identities, and is intended to provide a framework of basic theoretical and technical understandings for utilizing photography in conceptualizing, conducting, and disseminating psychological anthropology research.

4-0755 Consulting in Organizational-Culture Change

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology

This workshop is part of the Business Anthropology Matters! Initiative. Come participate in a workshop that builds on your anthropological skills in the area of organizational culture and change! The workshop is designed to help you discover whether a consulting career — with business, non-profits, government, or NGOs — may be in your future. First, we talk about “consulting basics” — who to approach, what to do and/or say, how to build and sustain client relationships, when to follow up, and why perseverance, compassion, and your own anthropological approach(es) matter. Second, we explore how client problems can connect with helpful anthropological methods and theory and become the basis for a consulting project. Examples are chosen from a variety of industries. Third, we examine the range of ways in which clients may work alongside us as partners and how data collection and analysis methods are adapted to suit shifting project foci. We discuss how to communicate emerging results, enhance shared understanding, and guide clients toward beneficial action. Fourth, we discuss how to work effectively with clients to assist them in addressing the often beneath-the-surface issues they face. Such efforts may take the form of generating recommendations, tool development, intervention creation, and workshop delivery, as well as making career-long friendships and other reciprocities. Finally, we focus attention on the thorny issue of resistance to change — including individual and organizational issues and dysfunction. We consider various strategies to mitigate it. Bring your thoughts, experiences, and recommendations. We hope to see you there!

Production and Consumption of Advertising

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology

This workshop is part of the Business Anthropology Matters! Initiative. Production and consumption of advertising is an interactive process in which advertisers and consumers learn from each other and respond to cultural ideas presented in the public sphere. At the heart of the process is ethnographic research on consumer practices, which provides insight into the meaning and use of products and services in everyday life. Findings from this research are incorporated into the creative and political process of developing advertising campaigns. This workshop will engage participants in the anthropology of doing consumer research, designing advertising messages and producing culture. Through simulated situations, participants will work in teams to solve client problems and take a critical approach to assessing culturally mediated messages. Upon completion, participants will be able to (1) list and apply ethnographic methods for conducting consumer research and developing insights, (2) describe the interrelationship between the everyday life of consumers, and brand positioning and message creation in the competitive marketplace, and (3) demonstrate how advertising communications seeks to identify and build relevance with select target audiences while not with others.

Teaching Anthropology: Theory and Method for the 21ST Century

This half-day session on teaching anthropology in the contemporary university will address best practices for new and veteran instructors in lecture, online, field, laboratory, and small-group discussion formats. Topics covered will include effective lesson planning across the subfields, syllabi and rubric design, in-class activity and discussion moderation, and how best to prepare a teaching portfolio for the job market. By the end of this session, participants will be able to design and implement lesson plans that engage students' multiple learning styles, are scaled to account for differing student backgrounds, and harness learners' multiple literacies to apply classic anthropological insights to contemporary contexts. Particular attention will be paid to cultivating students' critical thinking skills and how to engage students in course subject matter through experiential learning. Workshop facilitators will provide attendees with a reading list of pedagogical best practices, sample syllabi and in-class activities as part of this session.

Using "Performance" as Anthropological Focus and Framework

SPONSOR: Society for Humanistic Anthropology

Humans are immersed in a world of performance. In some cases, the performative aspect is overt, such as dance performances, theater troupes, or public rituals. Other instances may involve less clear-cut aspects of performance, such as political debates, social media, or classroom interactions between educators and students. For some anthropologists, performances and groups IS a site of social action among participants, while for others, social phenomena may be more productively viewed AS performance (e.g. the performance of gender, performance of competence in professional settings, etc.). Despite encountering performance daily, few of us receive methodological training specifically assessing or understanding the role of performance in social life. This workshop introduces several approaches for "getting at" performative aspects of lived life, as well as presenting examples of research on and through performance. The presenters' research expertise in martial arts, dance, and athletics—combined with theoretical approaches to embodiment, identity, and visual representation—to introduce different paradigms for: (a) identifying 'breakthroughs' into performance; (b) analyzing performances; (c) approaching participant observation through the lens of performance; and (d) disseminating research on and through performance. In sum, participants will be introduced to both theoretical models and practical strategies for including performance as both a focus and a framework in their anthropological toolkit.

5-0245 Workplace Anthropology

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology (NAPA)

This workshop is part of the Business Anthropology Matters! Initiative. As people increasingly spend their waking hours at workplaces, anthropologists need to understand those experiences. Our practitioners must develop distinct skills to access, document, analyze and relate the lives of workers and the businesses that employ them. We study workplaces to learn about the lives of people who work in businesses, both as academics outsiders and embedded practitioners. Businesses employ anthropologists to understand a variety of worker-related issues within their own organizations. This workshop will consider the practical, theoretical and ethical issues that must be resolved to do workplace anthropology using the experiences of people who have done such fieldwork.

5-0250 Ethnographic Poetry in Contemporary Anthropology

SPONSOR: Society for Humanistic Anthropology

Renato Rosaldo describes “antropoesia,” as a bridging the cultural and social scientific fields of poetry and anthropology. Keeping the move for “antropoesia” in contemporary anthropology central, this workshop will explore ethnographic poetry as a mode of ethnopoetics that posits that an ethnographer-poet while directed by training also faces a “surfeit” of witnessing in ways other than objective. Also because participant observation as a methodology demands a visceral empathy with the field; the ethnographer-poet is doubly prone to experience and articulate the witnessing in the realm of imaginary and one, which is grounded in fact. This workshop aims to bring together poet-ethnographers to explore how poetry allows for capturing the field and its experiences as a mode of contemporary ethnopoetics and strengthens the move for antropoesia. Through guided writing, and readings we will discuss how the ethnographic poem becomes a witness that meshes together the ethnographer as a professional and a visceral human with a deeply personal voice. This workshop will aim to produce publishable pieces from the participants.

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology

Those holding an anthropology Master’s degree with a non-specialized focus often have myriad possibilities but few clear directions about where to work and what job title to assume. This workshop will first present research-based findings on where MAs work and what they do. We will then discuss job-seeking strategies, provide a small decision tree to help focus decisions, and have a participatory exercise in seeking out and submitting a resume to an employer of interest. The final portion of the workshop will be a Q&A session with anthropological advisers on job searches and career mentoring.

SPONSOR: American Ethnological Society

Undergraduate students enrolled in introductory cultural anthropology courses, both majors and non-majors, comprise our discipline’s largest public audience. More than a blog post, an op-ed or a citation in a major media piece, the introductory classroom provides anthropologists with opportunities for in-depth and extended presentation of the key research strategies and analytical frameworks of our field. Come discuss how to create a dynamic and engaged intro classroom experience designed to help students apply the key concepts of anthropology to their everyday lives.

5-0590 Methods for Ethnographic Research Utilizing Social Media

SPONSOR: Society for Humanistic Anthropology

Social media has been a staple of our contemporary life. The amount of time spent, the amount of information shared, and the significance for life today is staggering. Hine refers to the contemporary scene as “embedded, daily internet” (2017). There has been extensive ethnographic research done by means of FaceBook, but as the number of social media outlets continues to expand there is a need to look at a wider range of social media resources including Twitter, YouTube, and others.

Social media beckons as a rich resource for ethnographic research. However, there are numerous issues to consider including which platform, the role of participant observer, ethics, and IRB among others. This workshop serves to provide an overview of recent research and to serve as a time to discuss participants current as well as planned research projects involving social media. Past workshops have lead to ongoing projects such as a AAA panel. We will consider the possibilities for collaboration and shared projects as follow up to the workshop.

5-0585 Publishing Your First Book

Five authors who work at the nexus of cultural/medical anthropology and East Asian studies will share their experiences and provide insights on the process of publishing your first book. We will discuss the various steps involved in the book publishing process, including developing a compelling book proposal, approaching editors, finding the right publisher, surviving the review process, negotiating the contract, managing the production process, and marketing your book. We will pay particular attention to strategies for reframing and revising a dissertation into a book manuscript. Panelists include Katherine Mason (author of Infectious Change, Stanford 2016), Priscilla Song (author of Biomedical Odysseys, Princeton 2017), Elana Uretsky (author of Occupational Hazards, Stanford 2016), Jie Yang (author of Unknotting the Heart, Cornell 2015 which won the Society for East Asian Anthropology’s 2016 Francis Hsu Book Prize), and Li Zhang (co-editor for Oxford’s “Issues of Globalization” series and author of In Search of Paradise, Cornell 2010 which won the 2011 Hsu Book Prize). Acquisitions editors from major university presses will also give brief presentations. Workshop participants should bring a draft book proposal to circulate for peer review and feedback.

5-0580 Crafting Creative Nonfiction

SPONSOR: Society for Humanistic Anthropology

This workshop describes the flexible genre of creative nonfiction and explores ways in which it can be employed to express anthropological insights in accessible ways to reach multiple audiences. We explore the story elements and writing choices which make these pieces work effectively, considering a wide range of possible formats, including: narrative structures, creatively framed stories, lyric essays, and journalistic style essays.

From her experience as the Creative Nonfiction Editor at Anthropology and Humanism, presenter Julia Offen addresses confusion about the genre and common problems writers encounter in their work. Including writing exercises, this workshop assists participants in developing effective creative prose and gives practical advice as participants work through their story ideas. Prior experience with creative writing is not necessary.

5-0695 Reimagining the Customer: An Anthropological Framework for Innovation in Business and Social Enterprise

SPONSOR: National Association for the Practice of Anthropology

This workshop is part of the Business Anthropology Matters initiative. The business world traditionally conceives of its customers in terms of direct customer relationships and hands-on customer engagement. Anthropologists well know that any product or service becomes the locus of a complex ecosystem of different types of users and stakeholder groups. In this workshop, we take a step back from familiar approaches to “customer ethnography” and move beyond simple subject-object conceptualizations of “the customer” that predominate in current approaches to business strategy and innovation; we will instead explore broader frameworks for thinking about human engagement with the outputs and effects of business, informed by social theory and supported by ethnographic insight. Workshop participants will take a “complex human ecosystem” approach to the customers and populations engaged by business and apply a new typology of customer experiences—including non-direct types of experiences such as “ambient,” “associate,” “intermediary,” and “proxy.” Working together in small groups, participants will explore how this expanded perspective can help businesses or social enterprises reimagine their customers and their offerings—with particular emphasis on understanding and reaching out to individuals and populations that are overlooked, underserved, or fully disenfranchised by existing products and services. The workshop presenters will share examples from their own work in healthcare, urban planning, education, and other fields to bring the ecosystem perspective and experiential typology to life. Together, we will develop new ways for anthropologists to consult with business and social enterprise to imagine more beneficial outcomes for customers and society.
